

National Taipei University

National Taipei University

National Taipei University was established in 1949.

NTPU presently has two campuses: the Taipei Campus and San Shia Campus. The former, which is located in the busy and bustling financial and political center of Taipei City, is accessible to metropolitan inhabitants and boasts of highly functional and well-preserved archaic structures.

The school is known for educating and training talents in the fields of law, business, public affairs, social sciences, humanities, electrical engineering and computer science; its students have made significant contributions to Taiwan's political, social, and economic development.

Many of our graduates go on to be highly successful professionals and serve in government agencies, work in the legal and financial fields, or are employed by private companies and non-government organizations
